Washington, April 12.—The President is nack from his first sea voyage. He walks with a roll and a slight list to port. His conversation is larded with tarry expletives. He "turns in" at four bells in the hour for Grant's tomb.

tives. He "turns in" at four bells in the first watch, and thinks of dropping cigar's for plug tobacco and a clay pipe.

The Dolphin was reported off Ladian Head proving ground at 11 o'clock, and she reached the Navy Yard at noon. The first member of the crew to land was "Mr. Fish," the ship's car, who fied up the dock like an express train. The President's carriage was in walting for the party, and they were soon on their way to the White House.

had been much benefited.

The President on this, his first trip as Commander-in-Chief of the Navy, showed an excellent example of discipline to his subordinates on board in every way, and was very careful not to infringe upon any of the rules or regulations of the service. The first time he came on deck to smoke, he asked the quartermaster stationed on the poopdeck if he was permitted to indulge in his cigar in that part of the ship. Un

Unfortunately the Journal did not have a camera on hand to photograph the expression of the quartermaster's face, but listory records that after he had recovered his presence of mind he stammered, "Yee, sir," being sure that the President could smoke in the magazine if he felt so disposed.

The scene in the cabin every evening was very domestic, the President, with his less crossed and enjoying his cigar, sitting and talking with some of the officers or his secretary, while Mrs. McKiniey, who is fond of the domestic accomplishment of crocheting slippers. Indalged her falley to her heart's content, undisturbed by the duties or cares of entertaining. Grouped around were the ladles of the party, Mrs. Bates and Mrs. Saxton, while Secretary Porter and Medical Director Bates passed the time in conversing with Capitain Clover, the commander. The party occasionally indulged in a game of sevenhand euchre, of which President and Mrs.
